Title

Director, Iacocca Institute Professional Education

Corporate Summary

Empowering the leaders of today and tomorrow, the Iacocca Institute focuses on developing programs and activities critical to global and local leadership. The Iacocca Institute was jointly formed in 1988 by Lee A. Iacocca and Lehigh University. We are dedicated to cultivating the potential of individuals and to increasing the global competitiveness of organizations. Join us in examining innovative practices through a variety of highly interactive learning experiences and programs.

Carol Ham has been working at Lehigh University's Iacocca Institute since 2005. In her Professional Education role, Carol is responsible for assessing training and development needs and delivering programs to meet those needs. Training programs are marketed to a variety of audiences including professionals in the Lehigh Valley, Lehigh University Alumni, members of the Manufacturing Resource Center, and Lehigh faculty and staff. Additionally, custom training programs are developed specifically for organizations upon request. In addition to her role in Professional Education, Carol previously managed the business consulting projects for the Global Village program and has also supported the Office of International Affairs on special projects.

Carol brings a great deal of experience to the Iacocca Institute. She received a BS in Business Education from Bloomsburg University in Pennsylvania and an MEd. in Globalization and Educational Change from Lehigh University. Early in her career, Carol worked as a business teacher in a Pennsylvania public school, but the majority of her career was spent teaching professionals while she was employed at a management consulting firm. In this capacity, she taught a variety of courses on topics including: project management, problem solving and decision making, performance management, and management of multiple priorities. Carol facilitated these workshops and provided consulting services in a variety of business environments within diverse industry groups.
